How can a Master's help me?

Here is how you can benefit:

A recent survey conducted by the Kremen School of Education and Human Development revealed the prevalent need to be adequately prepared to teach linguistically and culturally diverse students (LCD). This professional preparation will require an advanced degree.

- Advance your teaching skills to better assist linguistically and culturally diverse students in the classroom.
- Gain a foundation in research, curriculum, and leadership that will assist in promoting equity in schools serving LCD learners.
- Advance your career options as well as salary.

- Offers graduates specialized preparation for a wide variety of positions in educational and community settings serving LCD learners such as higher education, district level positions, social services, and as community leaders.
